

Set Yourself Up for Success

Labor Day came and went in what felt like the blink of an eye. One minute the semester feels brand new, and the next we're returning from our first holiday weekend. While Labor Day is a welcome chance to pause and recharge, it also serves as a reminder that the semester's regular rhythm is now officially underway.

Classes are moving, syllabi are turning into actual assignments, and those good intentions from Week 1 are about to get tested.

The good news? Starting strong doesn't mean doing everything alone. This early stretch of the semester is the perfect time to build smart study habits, get organized, and figure out what support will help you work smarter—not harder. As you settle into your routine (and enjoy the day off), keep in mind the academic resources on campus designed to help you stay on track from the very beginning.

For example, be sure to check out this week's Resource Spotlight to learn more about the UNC Learning Center, your go-to center for building skills, boosting confidence, and staying on track in your courses all semester long.

The UNC Learning Center

Starting a new semester is your chance to get off to a strong start. Developing good academic habits early can make all the difference, and the UNC Learning Center is here to support you. Whether you're looking to strengthen your study strategies, manage your time more effectively, or find STEM resources, the Learning Center offers academic coaching, peer tutoring, and workshops designed to help you stay focused and confident in your coursework.

In addition to in-person support, the Learning Center provides a wide range of online resources you can access anytime. From downloadable handouts on note-taking and test prep to self-paced modules on time management and productivity, their tools are designed to meet you where you are. As your calendar begins to fill up, take a moment to explore what the Learning Center has to offer. It's a smart way to stay ahead while you take on the fall semester.

And don't forget about The Writing Center, where you can get feedback on papers, presentations, resumes, and other writing projects at any stage of the writing process, along with access to helpful online writing resources.
